Let's Explore!

Sally blogs about an offbeat artist. Who is it?

* "Offbeat" is an adjective meaning very different from the norm.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Surreal ... eccentric ... imaginative ... These three words capture the essence of Salvador Dalí, a prominent Spanish painter. I'm sure you have seen his most famous work, called The Persistence of Memory, completed in 1931. Dalí's life was as offbeat as his work.

He worked passionately with other art forms, including photography, film and sculpture and worked with other artists of the time. He loved oriental clothes, luxurious goods and indulged excessively in everything. Dalí's behavior was often described as grandiose and attention-grabbing, often more so than his artwork. He used both classical and modernist styles in his work and many of his critics enjoyed his "strange" creations.

He was born in 1904 in Spain. He traveled to Paris and eventually his work was shown in London and then in the United States. He lived there after World War II and then returned to Spain where he and his wife stayed until his death in 1968.

Learning Points

The Present Perfect vs The Simple Past Tense

We use the Present Perfect and the Simple Past for events that started or happened in the past. The difference is that the Simple Past is used for past events that happened at a very specific time, while actions with no specific time are expressed in the Present Perfect. You can also use the Present Perfect when the past finished action has a connection with the present. Observe the set of examples:

Examples:

I saw The Persistence of Memory at the museum one month ago.

Action Painting has been one of the most visited attractions.

Art has changed my life.

There are regular verbs in the Simple Past. You add -ed to the basic form of the verb to conjugate them.

Examples:

I visited the Louvre museum 5 years ago.

He painted many masterpieces when he was young.

In the Present Perfect, you use the auxiliary verb have or has. The name of the tense is Present Perfect because the conjugation of the auxiliary verb follows the rules of the Simple Present form. Let's remember:

Examples:

I paint portraits. I have painted more than 50 portraits.

She paints portraits. She has painted more than 50 portraits.

Apart from the auxiliary verb have/has, you need the principal verb or action in the past participle form.

Some verbs can be regular verbs. Their conjugation is exactly the same as the Simple Past form, that is, you add - ed.

Examples:

Has art influenced you?

Dali's paintings have inspired me.

I have learned a lot about Dali.
