Let's Explore!

Sally blogs about a master artist. Who is it?

* A "master artist" is someone who is very skilled in their artform.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Have you heard of the paintings called Irises or The Starry Night? These are two of the most well-known works of art by the master artist, Vincent van Gogh. Throughout his life, he experimented with different forms, colors and styles of painting.

When he moved to France in 1888, he was influenced by Impressionism, a popular trend at the time. Elements of Impressionism include small, thin brushstrokes and accurate depiction of light as it changes in a composition. Van Gogh became devoted to perfecting his use of light in his paintings.

The melancholy outlook he had on life is reflected in his art. As he got older, he started to behave more erratically and unpredictably. His brother, Theo, did his best to help him and visited him often.

Eventually, van Gogh's depression caused him to shoot himself in the chest. He died two days later at the age of 37. His paintings show us his genius and his unique representation of reality.

The Present Perfect Tense vs. The Simple Past Tense

We use the Present Perfect and the Simple Past for events that started or happened in the past.

The difference is that the Simple Past is used for past events that happened at a very specific time, while actions with no specific time are expressed in the Present Perfect.

You can also use the Present Perfect when the past finished action has a connection with the present. Observe the set of examples:

Examples:

I've loved The Starry Night from the first time I saw it.

It has been one of my favorite paintings ever.

Art has changed my life.

There are irregular verbs in the Simple Past. They have significant, unpredictable changes in the Simple Past tense. Here are some examples:

Examples:

I heard of van Gogh when I was at school. (to hear)

I saw many attractive paintings at the museum last night. (to see)

Sadly, he shot himself in the chest. (to shoot)

In the Present Perfect, you use the auxiliary verb have or has.

The name of the tense is Present Perfect because the conjugation of the auxiliary verb follows the rules of the Simple Present form. Let's remember:

I love art. I have loved art all his life.

He loves art. He has loved art all her life.

Apart from the auxiliary verb have/has, you need the principal verb or action in the Past Participle form. Some verbs can be irregular verbs. They can have little changes or significant changes. Sometimes, these changes are the same you see in the Simple Past. Look at the examples:

She has bought a new portrait. She bought it last week.

I have heard of van Gogh once. I heard of him at school.
